A SAW MILL WRECKED.

A Boiler Explodes at Mt. Sterling Killing One Man and Injuring Several Others.

The large saw mill and hoghead factory belonging to Josiah Lindsay at Mt. Sterling was badly wrecked Tuesday morning by an explosion of the boiler. In addition to the damage to the property the explosion caused the death of one man and severely injured several others.

Mr. Lindsay was formerly a citizen of Mason County, being a son of Richard Lindsay, of Lewisburg precinct, and a cousin of County Clerk W. W. Ball.

There were eight men at work in the mill at the time. Ben Lindsay, aged 15 years, son of the proprietor, was fearfully burned and scalded about the face and chest and bruised by flying timbers. His injuries are probably fatal. Commodore Razor, colored, who was adjusting a belt at the time of the explosion, was blown through the roof of the building about twelve feet, but escaped uninjured. Wm. Trumbo, colored, sustained a severe cut on side of the head and a painful wound on the lower part of the left leg. George Trumbo, brother of the latter, was slightly bruised on the body by flying bricks and timbers. Robert Johnson, colored, was slightly scalded about the face and hands. W. D. Stevenson, who was in charge of the mill as superintendent, was killed instantly. An examination showed that he was horribly scalded by the escaping steam and demonstrated also that his neck was broken. Stevenson was a man of large family.

The boiler, which was an extremely large one, was torn from its casement, lifted over the top of the mill, tore out one end of the Mt. Sterling Iron Foundry building, smashing railroad ties and rails in its course, and finally landed 125 yards from where it started.

JASPER SELLARS, of Bracken County, was fined $25 and costs in the Mayor's Court Tuesday for carrying a pistol concealed. He was arrested Monday by Deputy Marshal Dawson.

THE firm of Smither & Bullock has been dissolved by mutual consent. Mr. Bullock retires and is succeeded by Mr. Frank Purnell. The business will be continued at the old stand, corner of Second and Commerce streets, under the firm name of Smither & Purnell.

The Baptists and the American Bible Society.

Editor Bulletin—Mr. Cecil's article in reply to mine under the heading of "The Baptists and the American Bible Society," was read with much interest. From his article several erroneous impressions may be drawn by the casual reader.

In the first place, Mr. Cecil is mistaken when he assumes that his address gave offense to his friends of the Baptist Church, or that it "irritated Mr. Garrett." I replied to the address, of my own free will and accord, and at the suggestion of nobody, and certainly not from "irritation," but only from a desire that the people might know both sides of the question. Of course, I did not hope to convert Mr. Cecil or any other advocate of the American Bible Society to my views on the subject, because we look at the question from entirely different standpoints. As I said, my only object was to defend my people in the stand that they have taken.

It seems to me that my brother Cecil is rather reckless in his use of language. For example he speaks of trying "to escape from provoking an assault." Webster defines "assault" as a "violent attack," and certainly no reader of my former article can, by any manner of means, make it mean an attack upon Mr. Cecil. He says that he is quite sure that in his address the facts were "quite concisely and correctly stated without injustice to anyone," and then goes on to reiterate his former statement that when "the society learned that Mr. Judson and his co-laborers had translated" &c. This is the very point at issue. If this statement is correct, how are you going to get rid of the conclusion that these Baptists either knowingly violated the rules of the society, or obtained money under false pretenses? I did not say that Mr. Cecil meant to bring this charge against Judson and his associates, but that the language he uses implies this. Let us see. The statement in question is that "in 1835 it was learned that Dr. Judson and those associates with him had published at the expense of the society a translation of the New Testament into Burmese, and instead of transferring had translated baptizo" &c. Now in regard to this I submit the following:

1—Mr. Judson and his co-workers were perfectly familiar with the principles and rules of the American Bible Society from the beginning, as is evident from Judson's published letters.

2—Mr. Judson in his Burmese translation of the New Testament published under the auspices of the society, translates the word "baptizo" by a word meaning to immerse.

3—Therefore, if the society had a rule prohibiting such translation, Mr. Judson knowingly violated that rule. Or this: 1—Mr. Judson and his co-workers were perfectly familiar with the principles and rules of the American Bible Society from the beginning, as is evident from his published letters.

2—"In 1835 it was learned that Mr. Judson and his associates had published at the expense of the society," such a version.

3—If they obtained money for this Burmese Bible without informing the society of the translation of "baptizo," they obtained money under false pretenses.

I respectfully affirm that if Mr. Cecil's statement of the case that "in 1835 it was learned that Dr. Judson and his associates had published at the expense of the society &c," be correct, either one or the other of the conclusions is inevitable. The only other resort is to conclude that the society never had expressed itself on this subject until Mr. Pearce's request was brought before it in 1835. And a careful reading of the records proves this to be correct. There is not one word in the constitution in regard to it, and the report presented by the special committee appointed on Mr. Pearce's request proves beyond a doubt that my assertion is correct. The report is as follows: "The committee do not deem it expedient to recommend an appropriation until the Board settle a principle in relation to the Greek and baptizo." Does not this show beyond a doubt that the society never had before expressed itself on this subject, and that Mr. Judson had violated no rule of the society in his work? I affirmed in my former article that help was granted Mr. Judson from 1830 with a full knowledge that he had translated "baptizo." Mr. Cecil took no notice of this assertion, and yet I am fully prepared to prove it. However, it is useless to pursue this part of the discussion. As I said before, we look at it from different standpoints, and I suppose will continue to do so.

In regard to the "American Bible Union," Mr. Cecil says that I "appear to deny that it was a Baptist society." I beg my brother's pardon, but certainly he could not have carefully read what I said about this Union. I do not intend to deny that it was a Baptist society, although they always disclaimed any denominational connection. I knew very well that it was always controlled by Baptists, and my remarks in my former article were not intended in any way to imply that it was not. I was only referring to the fact that other denominations assisted in making what is known as the bible union version of the New Testament, and that therefore the views on baptism incorporated in that version could not be "peculiar to Baptists," as Mr. Cecil stated in his address. Mr. Cecil in his reply seems to place emphasis on the word "employed" when he says that he knew "the Baptists wisely employed the aid of scholars, &c." Certainly he does not mean to imply that these scholars could be hired to incorporate the "peculiar views of Baptists" into a translation of God's word, unless they themselves believed these views to be correct.

As to the death of these two "Baptist Bible Societies," to which Mr. Cecil refers in his closing paragraph, I simply ask those interested in this discussion to refer to my former article and see what is there said about the consolidation of these societies in 1883 into the Bible Department of the American Baptist Publication Society which "vigorously continues the work of both." Mr. Cecil's epitaph is premature. The transaction at Saratoga in 1883 was not a death, but a wedding. It conveys an erroneous impression to say that the societies "ceased to exist," when in fact the combination formed a society stronger than either. When Mr. Smith marries Miss Jones does either really cease to exist? True, Miss Jones is no longer Miss Jones, but her name only has "ceased to exist." So of the societies, it may be said that in name only they have ceased to exist. Their work still lives, and Baptists are more alive to bible work than ever before.

Now in concluding this discussion, I want to say that no spirit of irritation, or of anger, prompted it, or inspired one word of what I have said. I concede to every man his right to differ honestly from me in my position on this question, and because I differed honestly from my brother, for whom I have only the warmest feelings of friendship, I wrote as I did. I can assure him that so far as I know, no member of the Baptist Church was "offended" by his address.

I cannot work with the American Bible Society, because my conscientious convictions will not allow it. I can say from my heart, "God bless its work," just as I can say, God bless the work of the mission boards of the Presbyterian Church, or of any work or any board which is carrying the gospel to the world. I know Mr. Cecil can say from his heart the same thing as to the Baptist Board of Missions, but I do not expect him to take a collection in his church for our Board, nor does he expect me to take one for his, for the simple reason that each of us is accustomed to do our own work in our own way. So I can say, God bless the American Bible Society, but I do not intend to take a collection for it, because we have a society of our own and I expect to work through it. Respectfully,
 R. B. GARRETT.
